

The videos had a lot of meaning, story and emotions behind it. It was a series of many interconnected stories. The first video starts with a boy leaving early in the morning without having his breakfast and gets angry on his mother for continuously asking him to eat and go out. Naturally, the mother finds her son's behaviour outrageous. She then removes her entire frustration on the maid and ends up firing her. This further leads to multiple scenes where people remove their frustrations on the other person. The maid's daughter becomes the next victim as her does not allow her to study any further. Saddened by this she removes her anger and frustration on a friend who is a rickshaw driver and breaks his heart. This in turn leads to the driver hurting a little boy as he drives ~~in~~ in his anger. After exchanging some angry words with the rickshaw driver, the boy cheats a coconut vender of 2 rupees. On a different track, a peon loses a job and he in turn irritates a young man who wants to go to a movie and in his anger and hurry, he hits the boy, with whom our story originally began, with his car. The second part however ends on a positive note. The first character appreciates a picture that his younger brother drew. A young boy finds love in a girl. The girl makes her father happy. The father gives his driver a day off for the driver's daughter's birthday and even gives him money to buy her sweets. The driver in turn makes a kid happy by paying the rent of driving a bicycle for 2 and half hours. The kid then is considerate enough to help a grandmother carry a big box to her house. This helps a young woman find love. In the end the happy couple elope where on the way, the groom reaches the accident spot of the first character and helps him.

From what I have observed in the videos, a person who does something good for another person results in the second person in turn doing something good whereas someone who does something negative like anger another person results in the second person getting irritated and angering another person.

So one must learn to have a hold over their emotions and learn to be kind to everyone.

Being angry can cause bigger problems to occur and end up hurting people physically and mentally. If one wishes to make this world a happy place, we must start by showing kindness to the people in our lives which would cause a chain reaction and eventually make this world a better place.
